2019 INDIVIDUAL EVENT AND PROGRAM SPONSORSHIPS

ENGAGING THE PUBLIC

The District Architecture Center (DAC), in the heart of the bustling Penn Quarter District, is where architecture meets the city. The headquarters of the Washington Chapter of the American Institute of Architects (AIA | DC) and its partner organization, the Washington Architectural Foundation (WAF), DAC is where the public—both adults and children—can learn about architecture and architects locally and globally.

Lunchtime Learning sessions, walking tours, lectures, exhibits, music and the arts let visitors experience and enjoy all facets of design. And prospective future clients can learn about the resources available to find the right architect and contractor, what to expect from the design and construction process, how to avoid common misunderstandings and how Washington-area architects vary in style and practice.

Each year six new exhibits in The SIGAL Gallery and The Sorg Gallery at the District Architecture Center celebrate the built environment, showcasing excellence in architecture, historic preservation, interiors, urban design, and universal design. Exhibition openings routinely sell out, attracting more than 100 people, while visitors who come specifically to view the exhibits number more than 3,000. Plus, thousands who attend meetings and events at DAC see the exhibits as they enter the building.

Architecture MONTH, now in its 19th year, is a public celebration of architecture in the nation’s capital which attracts more than 1,000 participants. More than 20 lectures, tours and events explore local architecture and the contributions of local architects.

The DAC Design Lecture series brings high-profile members of the international design community to speak at the District Architecture Center three or four time a year.

CELEBRATING ARCHITECTURE – AND THE ARCHITECTS AND PATRONS WHO CREATE IT

The AIA|DC chapter honors its members and their achievements with an array of annual awards and events.

The Fall Design Fête recognizes the contributions of people who make Washington a better place through their contributions as designers, advocates and clients. This year's event will take place in November 2019, where more than 450 people will gather to celebrate the winners of these awards:

- The Centennial Medal, the Chapter's highest honor, is awarded to an architect whose contributions span at least a decade of service to the Chapter, the community or the profession.
- The Glenn Brown Award honors an individual who has raised public awareness of architecture and improved the quality of life in Washington, DC
- The John "Wieb" Wiebenson Award celebrates the community spirit of architects combining good architecture with good works
- The Emerging Architect Award recognizes individuals who have shown exceptional leadership and made significant contributions to the profession early in their architectural career

A major event is held at the District Architecture Center in December with nearly 200 architects and their clients to announce and celebrate the winners of:

- the WASHINGTONIAN magazine and AIA|DC competition to showcasing excellence in residential architecture
- The Chapter Design Awards highlighting excellent in the categories of architecture, interior architecture, historic resources, sustainability, urban design and universal design.
- The UNBUILT Awards recognizing excellence in unbuilt projects, both theoretical and commissioned.

SERVICE TO THE COMMUNITY

CANstruction is an annual competition in which 20+ teams of architects build creatively out of canned goods which are then donated to the Capital Area Food Bank. More than 300 tons of food – which translates to 500,000 meals -- have been donated since 1998, making WAF one of the Food Bank’s largest contributors. Much more than a good time for hundreds of volunteers, the competition focuses on hunger in our region and showcases the design and construction industries giving back to the communities they help build,

Since it was founded in 1991 Pro Bono Design Services has provided free design services to 350 local nonprofit organizations that cannot afford professional assistance. Volunteer architects usually undertake six projects each year, ranging from re-developing downtown LaPlata, MD, following a tornado to transforming public school libraries on Capitol Hill into state-of-the-art learning centers to leading the Garrison Elementary School Community Charrette to develop conceptual plans to renovate its school yard.

NETWORKING AND PROFESSIONAL DEVELOPMENT

DesignDC provides education and networking opportunities to Washington, DC-area architects, builders and building industry professionals. In 2018 more than 550 people registered for 2-1/2 days of programs, with 60 education sessions and tours and 80 exhibitors. AIA|DC, AIA Potomac Valley and AIA Northern Virginia serve as co-sponsors. The 2019 DesignDC event will take place Sept. 16-17, 2019, Ronald Reagan Bldg.

Sponsorships Opportunities range from $500 to $12,000

Continuing Education Classes Each year the AIA|DC Chapter offers more than 100 continuing education lectures, seminars and classes for designers, architects and building industry professionals at the District Architecture Center.

At least once each month AIA|DC Committees engage a network of local leaders and innovators eager to share information and exchange ideas at social events and through program initiatives like Design in Action and Design in Aging. These unique affinity-based events let others learn from the experience of leaders in the field. The Emerging Architects Initiative's 7 x 7 program, for example, showcased this year's class of seven new AIA Fellows with each summarizing in seven minutes their career path, what being an AIA Fellow means to them, and what they know now that they wish they had known before.

INVESTING IN THE FUTURE

Architecture in the Schools (AIS) matches volunteer architects with public school teachers to enrich the learning experience of children, reinforcing core academics and teaching how to exercise analytical and creative skills through the architectural design process. AIS also fosters a heightened civic consciousness, bridging the gap between school and everyday life. AIS has reached more than 20,000 children in metropolitan Washington, DC, schools since it began in 1992. In 2003, schools in Arlington and Fairfax counties joined AIS. AIS now serves 40 schools and 1,000 students in K-12 classrooms each year during these 8-week architect-led sessions.

The District Architecture Center is the place for Hands on Architecture, bi-monthly workshops for 10-14 year olds which have engaged 250 children and their parents over the past two years. The Young Architects Series: Tools of the Trade, for example, teaches young people skills in drawing, model-making, site design, sustainability, theatre set design, and more. These monthly programs include architectural walking tours of Washington, DC, neighborhoods and each participant receives a certificate of completion.

Design in Action is a professional mentoring program that enables 11th grade students to work with top architecture firms during their spring break, concluding with a reception for friends and family at District Architecture Center. In 2012, the program launched with 6 students from Phelps High School and 6 architecture firms. In 2015 participation rose to involve 26 students and 26 architecture firms.

Design Like A Girl is a new program initiative launched in 2015 to address the issue of under-representation of girls in architecture and other STEM (science, technology, engineering and math) fields by engaging them in a continuum of programs and opportunities to work with female role models, ranging from summer day camps for 10-12 year olds to mentoring programs for older girls.

The Barbara G. Laurie Architecture Scholarship Program helps create the next generation of architects by sponsoring graduating high school seniors entering an accredited architecture program and follows the students through all five years of their academic career. Five scholars are supported each year.
